Pierre Poilievre and the Common Sense Conservatives

Dear Friend,

I have been talking to many of you this summer and one message keeps coming back to me: drugs and crime in Saskatoon are out of control. Many neighbourhoods are overrun with drug users, and criminals are making our streets unsafe.

On July 16, I held a townhall with the residents of Fairhaven who are directly impacted by the explosion of homelessness, drugs, and crime in their local park and surrounding area. People are angry and justifiably so. Politicians are making decisions for special interest groups and appealing to certain woke ideals, without considering the impacts that their decisions have on the people in the local area.

For example, we just need to look at our federal parliament. The NDP-Liberal coalition government in Ottawa passed Bill C-75, which now requires judges to give repeat offenders bail not jail, regardless of how violent they are or how many times they have offended.

Trudeau and Singh then signaled to criminals that there are no consequences for their actions, by replacing prison sentences with house arrest for those criminals that eventually do get convicted. It's not just house arrest for petty crimes—it's for violent crimes and drug trafficking.

And to top it off, let's not forget that it is your federal taxpayer money that is directly paying for these folks to get high from 'safe supply' prescription grade opiates—the very drug that is responsible for killing more and more people every day.

This does not have to be how we live. Our streets do not need to be unsafe. Criminals do not need to run free. Drug users do not need to be left untreated. Our country does not need to be this broken.

Conservatives will stand by ordinary Canadians and reject this nonsense. It is time for common-sense. It is time to End the Drugs and Stop the Crime.

Sincerely,

Brad Redekopp, MP Saskatoon West
